

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

rDirectory and myPassword v2.6 now supports Active Directory Lightweight Directory Services

AD LDS (formerly, ADAM) support address Namescape's customer's changing directory management needs

Phoenix, AZ. June 22, 2010 – Leading identity management applications provider, Namescape, announces the release of an upgrade to its flagship product, rDirectory and premier self-service password reset solution, myPassword. Version 2.6 supports Active Directory Lightweight Directory Services, or AD LDS (formerly referred to as ADAM), providing additional flexibility for businesses that utilize directory-enabled applications.

AD LDS uses the same directory service technology as Active Directory, so both rDirectory, Namescape's complete solution for identity information management, and myPassword's simple yet powerful, self-service password reset solution provide identical functionality out of the box.

"Namescape's customers requested support for AD LDS, and we were able to respond quickly, which means we can offer them a choice in directory management solutions while providing Namescape's full-featured identity and password management products," says Chris Roberts, Product Manager at Namescape.

Namescape brings peak proficiency to Active Directory with innovative identity management solutions and a unique approach to Active Directory management. Namescape's products leverage a company's existing investment and build on its current IT infrastructure by providing solutions that bring secure automation, access control, provisioning and self-service capabilities to Active Directory, while providing an immediate and continuous ROI to any organization.
